

To whom it may concern

July 21 1983

After spending six years as a physics teaching technician, two years as a university student, and a further two years as a plasma physics research technician, I came into contact with the work of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh through books and work of mouth.

I had spent years reading not only scientific and technical works but also a very broad spectrum of philosophical and religious authors and thinkers. The first chapter of Bhagwan's book 'I am the Gate' had such an impact that my whole attitude and approach to my work changed.

It seems that through Bhagwan's vision boundaries to traditional methodology melt, and a much more creative awareness is open to function.

In my own case this took the form of a brighter ability to the usually hidebound world of undergraduate physics teaching - not only this, but also a new world of writing and drawing took shape, all I feel had been lying latent and was unlocked by the genius of Bhagwan.

From my own point of view this exceptional man has something to offer to every profession and craft - not least, my day to day living has taken on a whole new quality of spontaneity and aliveness.

I feel a great depth of gratitude to this man, whose work is available to all with intelligence to take advantage of right now.
