To whom it may concern -

I am 33 years old. I became acquainted with Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh six years ago by one of his tape lectures. At this time I was finishing my studies in economics at the Free University, Berlin. I received my degree in 1979. Now I am working as a tax accountant in a professional office.

Bhagwan immediately appeared to me as a clear-cut scientist. Today we have a lot of "scientists" who can compile books and articles, but a genius is very rare. That means someone who has a daring way of thinking and is able to put it into a logical form. This scientific approach demonstrated in Bhagwan's philosophical, theological and psychological treatises assisted me greatly while working on a research paper investigating "Keynesianism and Monetarism." Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh is giving a new impetus to the scientific world. He puts his energy into reconnecting the sciences with their basis. Science, art and religion were a unity hundreds of years ago, rooted in men's trust in God. Bhagwan, a man of immense knowledge and wisdom, unites science with religion. This effort has inspired thousands of students and academics in Germany and given Bhagwan a deservedly outstanding international reputation.
